OCC 49th Commencement May 10

Dr. Brian Atwood recipient of 2013 Alumnus Award

Olney Central College's 49th annual commencement exercises will begin at 7 p.m. on Friday, May 10 in the OCC Gymnasium.

OCC will confer approximately 365 degrees and certificates. Friends and relatives of the graduates are invited to attend.

The 2013 Alumnus Award will be presented to Dr.

Brian Atwood.

"It's a great honor I didn't expect," Atwood said. "I'm so glad we have OCC. It is a big asset to the community and to the students. I think they get a better start with their education at OCC than they would at a four-year university. I really think it provides the best transition for most kids coming out of high school."

Atwood earned his associate's degree from OCC in 1994 and transferred to Southern Illinois University at Carbondale where he received a bachelor's of arts degree in physiology and biological sciences. He earned his medical degree from the University of Illinois' College of Medicine in 2001.

"I knew what I wanted to do from the time I was in second grade on," Atwood said. "I was always interested in the medical field and I liked science."

Nursing honor society holds first induction ceremony

The Illinois Eastern Community Colleges/OCC Nursing Program's Nu Chapter of Alpha Delta Nu held its first induction ceremony on April 28 at Wabash Valley College.

Twenty-one students from Frontier Community, Lincoln Trail, Olney Central and Wabash Valley colleges were welcomed into the national honor society of nursing.

During the ceremony, students received a pin, a certificate and cords to wear at graduation.

New club brings veterans together

Danny Morgan felt like he was struggling to fit in when he came to Olney Central College after completing his military service.

"I knew that if I felt this way, there had to be others out there who felt the same," he said.

Morgan began reaching out to other students who served or are serving in the military to establish a Veterans Club at OCC. He hopes the club will help connect those veterans who may be feeling isolated.

"You can be in a crowd of people and still feel like you're on a desert island," said Morgan, an OCC Administration of Justice student. "It is different than coming to college straight out of high school. The connection is not there with the younger students. My focus is not on what I'm going to do this weekend. My focus is to get out of school and get on with my life. The club will provide a chance to meet others who understand what you're going through."

Morgan began his military career with the National Guard in 1998 before joining the U.S. Army in 2003. He served as a combat engineer and supply specialist before leaving active duty in 2007. He was deployed to several overseas locations including combat zones.

Adam Griffy attended the club's first meeting and is assisting Morgan in his efforts to establish the Veterans Club at OCC. Griffy joined the U.S. Navy after graduating from Newton Community High School in 2005.

"I wanted to be a part of something bigger than myself," he said. "I think that is the reason a lot of people join the military."

Griffy served six years on active duty and was deployed to Iraq several times as a Fleet Marine Force Corpsman (combat medic) with the 1st Marine Division.

"In Iraq, my job was to take care of the physical and mental health of others," he said. "If someone was sick or wounded in combat, I took care of them. If they were having a bad day, they would come talk to me."

Griffy, an OCC student who will enter the college's nursing program this fall, said he misses the camaraderie he once shared with his fellow servicemen.

"When I got out of the military, all they said was 'thank you for your service and get out,'" Griffy said.

Griffy and Morgan hope the Veterans Club will give members a new sense of camaraderie. Both say combat experience is something that only others who have been in that situation can understand.

"It's hard to connect with other people," Griffy said. "I came home and I couldn't carry on a conversation with people I've known since we were in Pre-K together."

Morgan agrees.

"I keep a lot of stuff to myself," he said. "When I got out, I didn't want to say anything because I didn't think anyone would understand."

They hope the club will provide an opportunity for student veterans to share their experiences and assist one another as they successfully transition to college.

"I see this as a major support group," Griffy said. "I think coming here and just sharing our stories and hanging out will help."

Morgan said the alarming increase in suicides among veterans and soldiers reinforced to him the need to establish a support system for those returning from active duty. He also felt with no Veterans Affairs medical office nearby that a local group was necessary.

"I am a member of the Veterans of Foreign Wars and serve with the funeral honor guard," said Morgan,

SAN accepting students for next year

As the Student Advantage Network's academic counselor at Olney Central College, Jennifer Stroughmatt's goal is to help participants stay in college, graduate and successfully transfer to a four-year college or university.

"It's all about the students," she said. "I work with them to help them take the steps toward a future path that will bring them success and fulfillment, as well as a paycheck. The choices we make now can have lasting effects on our future. It is my goal to help each student discover what are the best choices for them, how to navigate life's curve balls and how to challenge themselves into achieving their best."

Student Advantage Network is part of the TRiO program at IECC, which is funded by the U.S. Department of Education. The program is designed to assist first generation college students — those whose parents haven't earned bachelor's degrees — navigate the collegiate system.

The program is currently accepting new students for 2013-2014. To be eligible, participants must be transfer degree-seeking students. They also must meet one of the following criteria: be a first-generation college student, fall within the low-to moderate-income guidelines or have a disability that affects learning.

SAN provides transfer assistance, free tutoring, peer mentoring, job shadowing, financial aid planning; referral service and cultural experiences and free campus visits. A Participation Grant also is available to help qualified individuals pay college expenses such as transportation, books, moving expenses to a transfer school and anything else students may need to be successful.

Stroughmatt also teaches three classes, Success in College and Beyond, Career Exploration and Leadership Development, which are offered exclusively to SAN students.

Throughout the year, SAN members also participate in a number of service projects.

The Student Advantage Network at OCC is designed to assist first generation college students navigate the collegiate system. The program is currently accepting new students for 2013-2014. Pictured are some of the current SAN students, front row, from left, Amy Scarbrough, Samantha Elder and Megan Brant, and back row, Andi Edmondson, Advisor Jennifer Stroughmatt, Christina Banning and Josh Corry.

"SAN students at OCC are all about giving back to the community," Stroughmatt said. "Students have held a winter wear drive, a backpacks home project to feed children, sewn individualized pillowcases for children with cancer who are hospitalized, started an anti-drug awareness campaign and provided under-resourced children with activities and toys to bring them joy, all this year alone."

Christina Banning, of Louisville, said SAN was instrumental in helping her to make a successful transition from high school to college.

"I think SAN has been a real confidence booster for me," she said. "I feel better prepared for my future classes and it has helped me with the steps I needed to take to apply for financial aid and to transfer. It's been a great experience."

Banning, who plans to study speech pathology at Eastern Illinois University, said she benefitted from the program's extensive career exploration.

"You get to know for sure what you want to do," she said. "We got to job shadow and we took personality tests to see what careers would be best suited for us."

SAN gives students the chance to explore a variety of job sites in order to expose them to future careers they may not have considered, Stroughmatt said. Opportunities to visit college campuses and participate in cultural trips also are key components of the program.

In the past year, SAN students have visited Indianapolis to explore careers in zoology as well as museums and sampled Mediterranean cuisine and culture. In May, SAN will attend a performance of Rock of Ages at The Centre in Evansville and visit the University of Southern Indiana campus.

Banning said the outings give students the chance to build lasting friendships.

"I like being around other people who are interested in the same things I am," she said. "We're really a very close-knit group."

Samantha Elder, of Noble, said SAN provides a vital support system for its participants.

"This is a chance to be with people who are going through the same things I am," she said. "It's a very unique group. It not only gives you support, but it pushes you to do better — even if you don't want to."

Elder especially enjoys working with the SAN mentors. These are second-year SAN students, who are specifically selected by Stroughmatt to provide information and other assistance to new participants.

"They are always there to help," Elder said. "They can help you with schoolwork and improving your grades. They also are there if you just need someone to talk to."

Dena Smith, of Olney, currently serves as a SAN mentor.

"I really like helping the other students," she said. "I can relate to the things they're going through."

As a returning student, Smith said SAN helped to ease her transition back to the classroom.

"I hadn't been in school for a long time," she said. "The other students never made me feel different. The program helped me to figure out what I wanted to do."

Smith, who plans to transfer to Southern Illinois University and major in social work, is now dedicated to helping other students succeed.

"I made some bad decisions in my life and I want to help other students avoid them," she said. "I can see where things might be going wrong for them and I can tell them, 'Don't do this.' A lot of their problems I can help them work through, but if it is something serious I can take it to Jennifer. We will try to help the students any way we can."

"I really love working one-on-one with the students," she said. "I love to encourage them and to help them to open their minds as they make the transition from high school student to adult life in college. My job is to help them with anything that relates to their college experience and their future. Each student presents a different set of circumstances. The variety is a big part of what I love."

Banning stressed that Stroughmatt is always available to assist and encourage students.

"Jennifer is awesome," she said. "She will help you out in any way she can. I know I will stay in touch with her when I move on."

Smith encourages eligible students to contact Stroughmatt about the program.

"I don't think enough people know about it," Smith added. "If anyone can get in, I would highly recommend they do it."

Students who think they may qualify for the program can contact Stroughmatt at 395-7777, ext. 2014, to learn more.

Photography Class Trip

The OCC Advanced Photography class recently took a trip to the Mesker Park Zoo in Evansville where students were able to use the various photo skills they have learned in their class. The zoo provided the perfect opportunity to practice with various settings on their cameras, such as ISO, aperture and shutter speed, zooming in and macro photography. Pictured, from left, are Rick and Penny Densmore, Ellen and Roger Bastian, Patsy Lou Abel, Instructor Tim Dunahee, Phyllis Brian, Gloria Owenby and Sandra Cochran.

OCC students named to All-Illinois Academic Team

Olney Central College's recipients for the All-Illinois Academic Team were honored at a special banquet on April 16 at the Crowne Plaza in Springfield. This year's recipients of the award are Brianna Harbold and Julie Hill.

For their commitment to academic excellence, recipients were presented with a special certificate and medalion. A framed picture featuring both Harbold and Hill was also presented to the college and can be viewed on the wall outside Room 102, where photographs of past OCC recipients also reside. Harbold and Hill had previously been recognized for their academic team selection at the OCC Student Awards ceremony on April 8.

"This was my ninth time attending the All-Illinois Academic Team banquet," said Advisor Carmen Jones. "It is always an enjoyable evening, and the accomplishments of the members of the team never cease to amaze me. One of the students recognized at this year's banquet was from Haiti. She had lived through the earthquake in Haiti a few years ago before coming to the United States to attend college. This young lady plans to pursue a degree in civil engineering and to return to Haiti to help her country rebuild. It is examples such as these that make attending this banquet in Springfield each year rewarding."

Jones added, "Our students, Brianna and Julie, are talented students and active members of PTK, and I congratulate both of them for the selection onto the All-Illinois Academic Team."

Each community college in the state is permitted to nominate two students to the All-Illinois Academic Team. The students must complete a lengthy application process to even be considered for the honor. The banquet serves as the final recognition of their success.

"Selecting our college's recipients for this award is one of the most arduous tasks Carmen and I face as PTK advisors. With so many talented students to choose from, selecting just two sometimes feels impossible," said Advisor Kelly Payne.

"Brianna and Julie are excellent students and both have been active PTK members since they became members. Both have taken their PTK membership beyond the club

Atwood finished his internship with St. Mary's Medical Center in Evansville in 2002 and completed his residency at Evansville's Deaconess Family Practice in 2004. In July of that year, Atwood returned to Richland County to establish his private practice at Atwood Medical in Olney.

"I always wanted to come back home. That had been my goal all along," said Atwood, a 1992 graduate of West Richland High School. "I like the community. A small town is much nicer to work in. I also like being in private practice because you do have a little more freedom."

Atwood is a member of the American Academy of Family Physicians and has received specialized training in Advanced Cardiac Life Support, Pediatric Advanced Life Support and the Neonatal Resuscitation Program.

Atwood resides in Noble with his wife, Susan, and three children, Jordan, Austin and Abigail. His hobbies include boating, ATV riding and gardening.

Atwood said he chose to attend OCC because of its outstanding instruction and affordable cost.

"It's a good place to get situated before you head off to school," he said. "One of the best things about OCC is the instructors. At a bigger university, you are taught by teaching assistants who are basically graduate students. At OCC, the instructors are teachers. That's their job. They are truly interested in teaching you."

While attending OCC,

Atwood especially enjoyed the physics class he took with instructor Ray Culver.

"It was fun and one of my favorite classes," he said. "We had a good teacher and it's where I met my wife."

Atwood said the instruction he received at OCC made his transition to SIU a smooth one.

"I think OCC did a great job preparing me," he said. "When I went to Carbondale, I was ready to step into the junior-level classes. I transferred without any problems."

IMT Program adds degree, certificates

Olney Central College's Industrial Maintenance Technology Program has added two new certificates and an associate's degree students can begin this fall.

"The industrial maintenance program was expanded to ensure that the students upon graduation would have the required skills that today's industry requires," said IECC Manufacturing Project Coordinator/Industrial Maintenance Instructor Mark Davidson. "The students who complete this program will possess the knowledge and a set of transferable skills in a multitude of areas that will provide them with many opportunities to be successful in the modern workforce."

OCC launched its IMT Program in August 2012 to meet growing industry needs. With the new changes, students will be able to complete Level I, Level II and Level III certificates that can lead to an associate's degree. Portions of the curriculum are online and include virtual lab simulators.

"The students do most of the work at home online and then are coming to class where the main ideas and topics are reinforced followed by many hands-on type labs that allow them to apply what they have learned," Davidson said. "We minimize the amount of seat time and maximize learning opportunities."

Davidson said employment opportunities are continuing to expand for industrial maintenance technicians. Refineries, power plants, manufacturers, large facilities and even hospitals need technicians with mechanical and electrical training to keep their facilities operating. The pay is also very competitive.

Davidson said graduates can expect

New Bluebird Houses

Students in Jim Burnett's Biology II class recently installed new bluebird houses at Olney Central College. The students removed older structures and replaced them with the new cedar birdhouses, which were specifically designed and placed around campus to create an inviting nesting habitat for bluebirds. Students who participated in the project included Cortney Allen, Mikyla Cooper, John Carie, David Mohns, Kelsee Ennis and Lukas Jones. The Ridgway Chapter of the Illinois Audubon Society donated the birdhouses. Pictured installing a birdhouse are Kelsee Ennis and Lukas Jones.

"Industry in the area is growing and the need for industrial maintenance technicians is increasing as well," he added. "Businesses are having a difficult time locating qualified industrial maintenance technicians. They are reaching out to us to provide workers with that training. There is a great need for those with mechanical and especially electrical trouble-shooting skills. Job placement should be nearly 100 percent for those who complete the program."

The photograph is by Jerry Masopust. At right, CSI Sergeant DeWayne Morris, of the Illinois State Police, visits and instructs the Advanced Photography class on the use of digital photography in crime scenes. Technology has made great advances in digital photography in helping to preserve and to record a crime scene, making it possible to bring a digital crime scene to court in jury trials. Photography not only captures the evidence, but can be used to animate and reconstruct a crime scene allowing jurors, judges and attorneys to see what has taken place. The Advanced Photography class is taught by Instructor Tim Dunahee, who always tries to present the latest technology available to enhance students' photographic skills. New classes begin in June. All-Illinois

Continued from Page 5 meetings, often helping out with various fund-raisers and service projects PTK conducts in and around the campus community," Payne added. "Carmen and I are confident that both will continue to succeed in all that they do. We wish Brianna and Julie the very best as they continue with their educational and career goals."

This year, more than 1,600 community college students competed for recognition, scholarships and a coveted spot on the national team. Of those 1,600 hopefuls, a small handful, based on their academic achievements and community service and involvement, are selected to the All-USA Academic Gold, Silver and Bronze teams.

However, whether one is selected to the national teams or not, all of the students recognized at the All-Illinois awards ceremony reflect a commitment to higher education and how one person can truly make an impact on his or her community and on the world at large. The list of accomplishments already achieved by these students is both humbling and inspiring, and leads many to consider these special PTK Scholars as "first among equals."

Ultimately, the evening was a wonderful time to celebrate the accomplishments of these talented students and to spotlight the high caliber of education being delivered at community colleges around the state, and the country overall.

These individuals truly represent some of the best and brightest students higher education has to offer, and as they make their way to various colleges and universities around the country they are reminded to "never forget from whence they came: Illinois Community Colleges!"

who was recently elected VFW Senior Vice Commander. "I didn't want to be at the funeral for someone my age because no one was there for them."

Morgan noted many returning veterans have Post Traumatic Stress Disorder and the club will give members the chance to discuss what they are experiencing with one another.

In addition, Morgan hopes the club can sponsor activities that bring together not only veterans, but their families as well.

"Our families are adjusting and dealing with things too," he added. "This would give them a chance to meet and offer advice to one another about how they are dealing with things like PTSD."

Eventually, Griffy would like for the club to bring speakers to the area and to support veterans' service organizations like the Wounded Warrior Project.

In addition to veterans, Morgan and Griffy encourage those who are considering military service to attend a meeting.

"We will tell you about our experiences and what we know," Griffy said. "If you are thinking about joining the military, we encourage you to talk to as many veterans as possible. I'm glad I served and proud of what I did. I know my mom, dad, family and friends are proud of me. I wouldn't change my experiences for anything in the world. I feel like I grew from each of them. I met some of the coolest guys in the world and made a lot of good friends."
