Lt. Gov. Sheila Simon visits OCC

Lt. Gov. Sheila Simon brought her Complete College Illinois Tour to Olney Central College on June 24.

Simon is touring each of Illinois' 48 community colleges to promote the state's goal of increasing the proportion of working-age adults with college degrees or certificates to 60 percent from 41 percent by 2025.

Simon is examining best practices at each institution and hopes to share innovations with other community colleges across the state.

"We can fix what is not working in our higher education system with what is already working in our system," Simon said. "We must learn from each other to reduce barriers to college success and create an educated workforce."

Simon said other institutions may be able to learn from Olney Central College, which was recently ranked among the top 120 community colleges nationwide by the Aspen Institute. The selection was based upon graduation and transfer rates as well as the number of low-income and minority students who completed their programs of study and if those rates improved over time.

Simon also plans to share information with state officials.

"I will be able to report to the governor and legislature what is going on at our outstanding community colleges," she said.

During her visit, Simon told faculty, staff and community leaders the state wants to assist OCC and other two-year colleges in the effort to help students make the transition between high school, the community college and four-year institutions.

"It doesn't always work as seamlessly as we want it to," she added.

Simon fielded questions from the audience on a variety of issues ranging from the effectiveness of standardized testing to the shortage of nursing faculty.

Financial Aid Director Vicki Stuckey asked about funding for the Monetary Awards Program Grant and Illinois Veterans Grant Program.

"The governor is a strong advocate of MAP and has worked hard to restore what was cut out of the budget," Simon said. "He understands the value of MAP in making higher education available to everyone and not to people just of a certain income level."

Single Parent Program Coordinator Ashley Charleston told Simon one of OCC's biggest assets is the ability of faculty and staff to establish personal relationships with the students.

"I know size has an impact on an institution," Simon said. "There is more opportunity at a smaller institution to be able to know people and to catch those who are struggling before they fail."

She added, "Community colleges are such an amazing resource for our state and are often overlooked. They open the door to a big range of possibilities for students and the community."

Simon concluded her visit by touring the campus with OCC President Rodney Ranes.

In addition to OCC, Simon visited Frontier Community College, Lincoln Trail College and Wabash Valley College, which are also part of the four-college Illinois Eastern Community Colleges District.

Tree planting ceremony

Olney Central College held a tree planting ceremony and sustainability roundtable on May 31. The college received a $5,000 grant through the Illinois Green Economy Network to help foster these and other green initiatives. The funds enabled OCC to purchase trees and shrubs for the campus and to host a series of presentations designed to help residents “green up” their lives. The roundtable discussion gave OCC employees an opportunity to talk about continued recycling efforts on campus and ways of reducing the college’s carbon footprint. Suggestions for future projects included initiating gardening classes and utilizing green spaces to grow produce as well as reducing the college’s use of paper and Styrofoam cups.

OCC Foundation Golf Outing

PTK collects textbooks for Africa

Olney Central College's Phi Theta Kappa chapter collected 14 boxes of textbooks, which will be donated to students in Africa.

PTK accepted the books during the week of spring semester final exams.

The books will benefit students in Africa who do not have access to the quality of books that are available in the United States. PTK receives funds from each textbook donated and the money helps pay for events and conference trips.
